Prior to working in-house, Allison practiced intellectual property law at the Manhattan law firms Fross Zelnick Lehrman & Zissu, and Edwards Angell Palmer & Dodge, and the Washington, DC firm Saidman DesignLaw Group, where she co-wrote an amicus brief to the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of the Industrial Designers Society of America.

She earned her Bachelor of Arts degree in History, cum laude, from Dartmouth College and her Juris Doctor degree from Georgetown University Law Center, cum laude. While in law school, Allison was a law clerk at the headquarters of The American Red Cross.

Allison was raised on Long Island (Oceanside) and returned to Long Island with her husband to raise their two children in Huntington. She writes and publishes picture books about lesser-known stories from Long Island history and is the president of an educational non-profit. In her spare time, she enjoys writing, volunteering with the FIRST robotics program, playing the piano and community work.

Allison is admitted to practice law in the State of New York. She is a member of the New York Bar Association and the Center for Art Law (Brooklyn), a Board member of the 1653 Foundation (Huntington) and a columnist for Innovate LI.
